
Contents

http://repository.nms.ac.uk/668

Deposited on: 27 June 2011
Contents

Contributors ................................................................ IV

Introduction ................................................................ VI

The Antikythera Mechanism: Reconstruction as a medium for research and publication
MICHAEL T. WRIGHT ...................................................... 1

Using experimental archaeology to answer the 'unanswerable':
A case study using Roman dyeing
HEATHER HOPKINS ...................................................... 21

The sound of Iron Age music: Reconstructing the Deskford Carnyx
FRASER HUNTER ......................................................... 50

The Sea Stallion of Glendalough: Reconstructing a Viking-age longship
SØREN NIELSEN ......................................................... 59

Learning through replications: The Planet locomotive project
MICHAEL BAILEY ........................................................ 83

Reconstructions as experimental history: Historic computing machines
DORON SWADE ........................................................ 103

The spiral conductor of Charles Grafton Page: Reconstructing experience with the body, more options, and ambiguity
ELIZABETH CAVICCHI ................................................... 127

Experience and self-reflection:
An electrical-historiographic-didactic experiment
JAN FRECKS ............................................................. 171

Materialised skills: Instrumental development and practical experiences
PETER HEERING ........................................................ 194

Aim at the stars, reach the Nicol: The Zöllner photometer
KLAUS STAUBERMAN .................................................. 209

Reconstructing the painting studio of Johannes Vermeer
PHILIP STEADMEN ..................................................... 234

Mid-nineteenth-century photographic studio technique:
Why recreate nineteenth-century photographic technology?
MARK OSTERMAN ...................................................... 251

Image credits ................................................................ 272

Associated keywords ...................................................... 275